This research covers hardware, software, and services for the low power AC drives market, which comprises the micro (under 5 kW), low-end (5-40 kW), and midrange (41-200 kW) power segments.

Low power AC drives are applied in process and discrete manufacturing industries, commercial buildings, and municipal infrastructure. They provide speed, motion, and torque control for equipment, such as fans, pumps, compressors, conveyors, kilns, centrifuges, mixers, hoists, cranes, extruders, printing machinery, and textile machines. The need for new infrastructure, safe food and water supply, increasing population, energy-efficient and climate-friendly solutions, and new investments in process industries will drive growth in the low power AC drives market. With diverse economic and regional dynamics in 2018, many factors influenced the development of the global low power AC drives market, with some factors boosting market growth, while others inhibiting it.

This research identifies growth segments and market trends, as well as the challenges suppliers face to achieve expansion in a very fragmented market landscape. In addition to the quantitative assessment, this research provides an insightful analysis of issues that will impact this business in the future.
